

Foods for Fasting Days

Eating Well During Religious Fasts

Religious and cultural fasts are common in India. While practices vary, many fasts allow specific foods while excluding others. Staying hydrated and choosing nutrient-rich allowed foods helps maintain energy and well-being during the fast.

Common Fasting Practices

Many Indian fasts exclude grains, lentils, and sometimes salt, while allowing fruits, dairy, nuts, and specific flours such as sabudana, kuttu, and singhara. The specific rules vary by tradition and by individual family practice.

Fasting-Friendly Foods

Sabudana, kuttu, singhara, rajgira, fruits, milk, curd, nuts, potato, and sweet potato are common fasting foods. These provide energy and a reasonable mix of nutrients while staying within traditional fasting guidelines.

Suggested Items:

- Sabudana khichdi with peanuts and potato
- Kuttu or singhara roti with curd
- Fruit chaat with a squeeze of lemon
- Roasted peanuts as a snack
- Milk or fruit milkshakes
- Potato or sweet potato cooked in ghee
- Rajgira laddoo or chikki

Food	Type	Notes
Sabudana	Grain substitute	Energy source
Kuttu	Flour	Used for roti
Singhara	Flour	Used for roti
Peanuts	Nut	Protein, fat
Potato	Vegetable	Energy source
Curd	Dairy	Protein, calcium

Conclusion

Staying hydrated is especially important during fasts. Coconut water, lemon water, and milk all help maintain fluid balance. Breaking the fast with a balanced meal supports recovery.
